Synergy Tsu: Indica/Sativa CBD hybrid 24:1 CBD:THC
Phenotype of Canna Tsu (aka Canna Sue) with higher CBD:THC ratio.

Synergy Tsu, a higher CBD phenotype of Canna Tsu, originally developed by Lawrence Ringo of SoHum Seeds (Southern Humboldt Seed Company) is the result of crossbreeding Catatonic and Tsunami parents. It is a favorite of many returning patients because of its medicinal effectiveness. Catatonic's popular and complex compounds, unveiled in an indica dominance that is tempered by Sour Tsunami's sativa dominant soothing qualities, results in uplifting clarity. Overall, it offers some of the best CBD-hybrid options.

Synergy Tsu has many medicinal applications which include treatment of conditions needing higher CBD ratios, such as pain, stress, Chron's disease, ALS, inflammation, anxiety and cancer. It can be effectively used in an extract form for skin conditions, beauty products and anti-aging cremes. Its high beta-Mycerene content helps with sleep problems and has a relaxing effect.¹

Notably: Synergy Tsu contains a high proportion of an often overlooked cannabinoid, CBDV (Cannabivarin), recently garnering increased attention for its ability to interact with pain receptors in the body, studies of CBDV indicate it is likely Neuroprotective, Anti-emetic, Anti-epileptic, promotes bone growth and regeneration. Other properties remain to be investigated.

In 2014, the Endocannabinoid Research Group in Italy published a study in the journal ACS Chemical Neuroscience. Examining the effect of cannabinoids in the treatment of epilepsy and found that both CBD and CBDv play multiple roles in helping reduce and modulate seizure activity. Reported the study's researchers:

"CBDv reduced both epileptiform burst amplitude and duration."²
